ANIMALS IN SHELTERS

CATS:

- Cats need very large crates (because they're in there, 24/7)
- Litter box on one end, "bed" in the middle and food and water at the other end. Litter should never be near the food and water.
- Crates must be completely covered with blankets to reduce stress and odors.
- Litter boxes should be replaced every other day.

DOGS:

- Dogs should be in crates that are large enough for the dog to sit, stand and turn around. They don't need a crate any larger because they get exercise at least twice a day.
- Dogs must be walked a minimum of twice a day.
- Designate an "Exit" door and an "Entrance" door. This is to ensure that no two dogs are ever nose to nose.
- Dog's crates should also be covered in blankets to reduce stress.

REPTILES:

- Most reptiles will need heat lamps because they can't regulate their body temperature.
- Reptiles will need to be in aquarium style enclosures with GOOD latches.

BIRDS:

- Birds must always remain in their cages.
- Bird's cages should be covered with a blanket at night so that they and everyone else can sleep.

POCKET PETS (Hamsters, Guinea Pigs, Rabbits, etc.)

- These pets should have their bedding/hay changed every couple of days, depending on the size of the pet and the quantity. If an odor is detected, change it sooner.
- In general, these pets do not need a crate. They are usually kept in a "playpen" type of enclosure.

  If there are young children in the shelter, you will need an enclosure with a very small mesh or a glass enclosure to keep little fingers from getting nipped.
